If no other cause of complaint existed against this mode of Taxation, it would amply suffice to adduce the extensive variations in the value of Houses from locality only. It is well known that Houses in or near Cities and large Towns acquire an infinitely higher value; but does it follow that the Occupants of Houses so situated are possessed of Wealth in proportion to the increased rate of Taxation? Is not the contrary notoriously the case, the great majority of the Inhabitants of Cities being those who live by their exertions or abilities? Another and most fatal objection is to be found in the unequal mode of rating House Property for Taxation. The absurd sophism sometimes advanced, that if the House and Window Duties were repealed, the Occupants would not be benefited, but the Landlords, is clearly a fallacy. Rent is the Landlords fair remuneration for the outlay and employment of his capital, and the amount of Rent rests upon the expenditure for Building, &c.; any attempt...
